Black Prisoners and Their World: Alabama, 1865-1900

Mary Ellen Curtin

within the past due 19th century, prisoners in Alabama, nearly all Black Prisoners and Their World: Alabama, 1865-1900 of them African Americans, have been pressured to paintings as coal miners less than the main horrendous stipulations imaginable. Black Prisoners and Their global attracts on quite a Black Prisoners and Their World: Alabama, 1865-1900 few sources, together with the stories and correspondence of felony inspectors and letters from prisoners and their families, to discover the heritage of the African American women and men whose hard work made Alabama's felony procedure the main economic within the nation. To coal businesses and the country of Alabama, black prisoners provided, respectively, assets of inexpensive exertions and nation revenue. via 1883, an important percent of the crew within the Birmingham coal was once made of convicts. yet to the households and Black Prisoners and Their World: Alabama, 1865-1900 groups from which the prisoners came, the convict rent was once a dwelling image of the dashed hopes of Reconstruction. Indeed, the lease--the process below which the prisoners worked for the revenue of the corporate and the state--demonstrated Alabama's reluctance to allow pass of slavery and its decision to pursue economic prisons it doesn't matter what the human cost. regardless of the efforts of legal officials, innovative reformers, and exertions unions, the country refused to take prisoners out of the coal mines. In the process her narrative, Mary Ellen Curtin describes how a few prisoners died whereas others continued unspeakable stipulations and survived. Curtin argues that black prisoners used their mining talents to persuade Black Prisoners and Their World: Alabama, 1865-1900 criminal policy, call for larger treatment, and develop into wage-earning coal miners upon their release. Black Prisoners and Their global finds new proof approximately existence lower than the main repressive establishment within the New South. Curtin indicates anxious parallels among the rent and modern-day burgeoning process of non-public incarceration.
