Cultural Diversity, Families, and the Special Education System

Beth Harry

This paintings explores the quadruple drawback confronted by way of the fogeys of poor, minority, handicapped childrens whose first language isn't that of the college that they attend. The author's ethnographic research of 12 low-income Puerto Rican American households serves to demonstrate how the current constitution of the certain schooling process disempowers parents, apart from them from the decision-making tactics that categorise their teenagers as handicapped - and ultimately, frequently position them at an enduring academic disadvantage.
