Psychiatric technician Ted Karmade's shaky occupation takes an upturn while he is employed to take care of Quasar Zant, psychotic younger heiress of the City's richest family-corp. he is thrown right into a harmful Quasar international of power--and lethal secrets. there is no escape. in its place he needs to burrow into Quasar's mad soul, which takes him to a global of underground tunnels full of exiled mutants.

Ack Phhffffft! Wow, it is a completely non-sensical put up apocolypitic sf book, obsessed with undesirable psychology and holograms. the realm makes no sense, the apocolypse was once brought on by organic mutating agents, all people lives in a single city, (with the mutants locked Quasar within the basement, and other people devour protien wafers, but the economic climate is powerful adequate to ship astronauts to uranus, and Quasar construct mile high, a number of block radius Quasar skyscrapers for fun. It makes no sense. And the author has an obsession with knocking out the most personality on the finish of each chapter, its the single transition he is aware apparently, its fairly ridiculous, our hero is sort of a blow up punching bag. Oh and there are aliens, a a number of character disordered heroine/love intrest, a psychologist major personality (who simply will get carried alongside through the "plot"), silly androids, and mutants galore. Man, its terrible.
