Realism, Caricature, and Bias: The Fiction of Mendele Mocher Sefarim

David Aberbach

"Realism, Caricature, and Bias: The Fiction of Mendele Mocher Sefarim" explores the psychology of prejudice and self-hate within the fiction of Mendele Mocher Sefarim (Mendele the Bookseller, pen identify of S.J. Abramowitz, 1836-1917), one of many key figures in sleek Yiddish and Hebrew literature. It provides Realism, Caricature, and Bias: The Fiction of Mendele Mocher Sefarim a full-length research of the strain among realism and sketch in Mendele's description of the Russian Jews below tzarist rule, of the clash among the author's ardour for social swap and his often-undisguised loathing for his personal people. Mendele's seven novels, 5 of which he wrote individually - no longer purely translated - either in Yiddish and Hebrew, represent an important and influential physique of labor in glossy Jewish prose fiction ahead of global warfare II. He created the 1st personality in smooth Yiddish and Hebrew fiction, the nature from whom his pseudonym derives. His works are a devastatingly satiric portrait of Jewish existence in nineteenth century Russia and provides social and mental perception into the forces which ended in the mass migration of Russian Jews to the United States, to the increase of Zionism in addition to to Jewish involvement within the socialist and innovative routine in Russia on the flip of the century.
