Systematic Theology: Volume 2: The Works of God (Systematic Theology)

Robert W. Jenson

Systematic Theology is the capstone of Robert Jenson's lengthy and extraordinary profession as a theologian, being a full-scale systematic/dogmatic theology within Systematic Theology: Volume 2: The Works of God (Systematic Theology) the vintage format. This is often the second one and concluding quantity of the work. Here, Jenson considers the works of God, analyzing such subject matters because the nature and function of the Church, and Systematic Theology: Volume 2: The Works of God (Systematic Theology) God's works of creation.

I sang the praises of quantity 1, for it was once actually really good and beautiful. It's with a lot of remorse that I say quantity 2 isn't the same. First, the good. GoodHis topic is the identification of God within the narrative of Israel. It is a powerful subject and extra usually than not, he's winning in anchoring his loci during this theme. Whereas the bankruptcy on Scripture used to be weak, his narrative-theme does give you the floor for a worthy mirrored image at the nature of canonization. Humor: he's savagely funny. He by no means fails to ridicule the NRSV translation, as we all are morally obligated to do. Nice bankruptcy on sexual ethics and the character of polity. Particularly respectable bankruptcy on anthropology. He notes the inherent difficulties in Rome, the East, and in a few insufficient Reformed responses. BadHe adopts Barth's view of election. That's not my particular critique. Others have given larger reviews of Barth on that point, so I refer you to them (e.g., Horton). My challenge is that his bankruptcy on anthropology (where he primarily summarizes Luther's Bondage of the Will) turns out inconsistent along with his bankruptcy on Election. The bankruptcy on justification used to be undeniable bad. It was once so undesirable it looked like a superb bankruptcy on sanctification. I'm much less confident that the Finnish Interpretation of Luther fairly works. The bankruptcy on church government, whereas useful in declaring to the East the Systematic Theology: Volume 2: The Works of God (Systematic Theology) place they developed on a few points, primarily argues that we'd like a monarchical patriarch to set up unity. He's conscious that V1 made papal infallibility a situation for person salvation (or damnation), and he admits he's uncomfortable with this language (!), yet like different ecumenicists, he doesn't observe that Rome--even with the liberal pope today--will by no means budge in this point. It is because Ecumenicism consistently falls to the Pope's Jesuit surprise military troops. Flirts with universalism. To be fair, he does not verify it yet you could inform he fairly wishes to. Horton has given different Systematic Theology: Volume 2: The Works of God (Systematic Theology) reviews of Jenson on those points, so I refer you to them (cf Lord and Servant: A Covenant Christology and Covenant and Systematic Theology: Volume 2: The Works of God (Systematic Theology) Salvation: Union with Christ, esp. pp. 153ff, 174-176,
