I learn this while i used to be interpreting Nabokov's Bend Sinister. So i used The Passion Artist to be studying a special method to learn with books on the related time. either have an strange major personality who's a widower with a child. the mummy of 1 is dead; the mummy of the opposite is imprisoned within the town. either are filled with unusual sentences The Passion Artist that truly suggest anything for those who learn them twice, and either have plenty of very simple philosophy approximately life. and particularly approximately death. approximately memory. "...in the storehouse of reminiscence every thing is retained. All perception, all psychic life, every thing remembered, every thing dreamt, every little thing thought, the entire items and the entire residue whatever of the mental procedure are retain, all the way down to the final drop, the 1st invisible hair, in the storehouse of memory. not anything is lost, not anything discarded. each image, sensation, concept, has its personal invisible track. . . ." p. forty three (Harper Colophon paperback version TPA.) ""Naturally, the script of sunlight hours reminiscence is much extra refined in regard to authentic details, when you consider that a great deal of slicing and trimming and standard recombination should be performed by means of the dream manufacturers (of whom there tend to be several, in general illiterate and middle-class and pressed through time); yet a exhibit is often a show, and the embarrassing go back to one's former lifestyles (with the off-stage passing of years translated when it comes to forgetfulness, truancy, inefficiency) is by some means greater enacted by way of a well-liked dream than by way of the scholarly precision of memory. "But is it fairly as crude as all that? . . ." p. fifty seven (Bend Sinister) i love to think like i am studying anything while I learn fiction, that i am getting whatever to imagine about.
