The President's Agenda: Domestic Policy Choice from Kennedy to Clinton

Paul C. Light

during this 3rd version of The President's Agenda, Paul gently brings his acclaimed learn brand new via weighing the successes and screw ups of the Bush and Clinton presidencies in atmosphere a legislative schedule of family matters for Congress. The main seen development, based on Light, is the shrinking of the schedule and the absence of clean new ideas. Explaining the emergence of "the by-product Presidency," he attributes this more and more restricted time table to the issues linked to the tip of the welfare state, the thickening of government, the issues of the budget, the "Reagan effect," and the altering nature of social gathering politics. With Light's newest judgments and insights, The President's schedule continues to be a useful textual content for classes at the American presidency. "What has replaced is the content material of the President's agenda. Even below comparable political conditions, either Bush and Clinton had fewer proposals than their predecessors, and either tended to want ameliorations of the established order over daring breaks with the past. even though there are very important transformations among the 2 Presidents, no longer the least of that's Bush's excessive percentage of small-scale, outdated ideas, the 2 proportion a suggested tendency to appear backward for suggestion instead of The President's Agenda: Domestic Policy Choice from Kennedy to Clinton forward."—from the Preface
