The Wandering Jew, Book X by Eugène Sue

Eugène Sue

in the course of the interview of Adrienne with Rose-Pompon a touching scene happened among Agricola and mom Bunch, who have been a lot shocked at Mdlle. de Cardoville's condescension with reference to the grisette. instantly after the departure The Wandering Jew, Book X of Adrienne, Agricola had knelt down beside mom Bunch, and acknowledged to her, with profound emotion: we're alone, and that i can at size let you know what weighs upon my heart. This act is simply too merciless -- to die of distress and despair, and never to ship to me for assistance. take heed to me, Agricola -- No, there isn't any excuse for this. What! we known as one another through the names of brother and sister, and for fifteen years gave each facts of honest affection -- and, whilst the day of misfortune comes, you give up existence with out taking good care of these you want to depart in the back of -- with no for the reason that to kill your self is to inform them they're detached to you! Forgive me, Agricola! it really is true. I had by no means considered that, stated the workgirl, casting down her eyes; yet poverty -- wish of labor -- Misery! wish of work! and used The Wandering Jew, Book X to be I now not here? And despair!
