What Yellow Sounds Like: Poems by Linda Susan Jackson

Linda Susan Jackson

What's such a lot compelling approximately Linda Susan Jackson's debut selection of poems, What Yellow Sounds Like, is the intense self-possession of its younger girl narrator as she seeks to answer: who am I and to whom do I belong? Those poems are concerning the means of shaping the identification of 1 lady who comes from "a line of technicolor women" who've "honey/suckle buried freely within the folds in their flesh," a woman who comes from "men who bit their tongues, / ate dirt, dirt and their pride. labored anywhere," and will "soar off the ground." The terrain of Jackson's poems is particular, perilous, loving, humorous, passionate, uncompromising, contradictory—in different words, tremendously human. The language is assorted and inflected with the blues, and prefer the blues, pulls readers in via pictures and information which are either concrete and symbolic. Poem after poem charts the phases of this younger girl's improvement via her relationships along with her family, her history, and the the United States into which she is born that's outlined by means of race, epidermis color, gender, and class. The narrator develops a profound and crucial connection to the mythical singer, Etta James, the "canary coloured blues woman" and she or he acknowledges the ability within the sound of phrases as she recalls how Etta James "churned up her roar / to maintain different girls from dying." Close to the tip of the book, her great-grandmother tells her "Everything don't must be told. a few issues must." During this moment, the narrator is empowered to come to a decision what to inform and to inform it in her personal voice. Those poems have fun the sheer will and resolution of the self to search out and locate who or what it must develop and prosper. Because she used to be homesick for the smell of Virginia What Yellow Sounds Like: Poems tobacco and pit-roasted hog; because she longed to listen to her significant brother scratch out blues on his box; because she craved the texture of corn silk and had six stair-step children before she used to be twenty-five, she went to the funerals of strangers. -from kinfolk time out this kind of cohesive first assortment brimming with jazzy, sassy mischief and lifestyles lessons.
